

Abby Broyles

I am an artist currently living and making art in San Angelo, TX. I work primarily in ceramics as a method of understanding my experience and observations of the world around me. I have a fascination with relationships and exploring the way living creatures and inanimate objects interact together to influence the human experience. A tin can is a lifeline for those who eat out of them. A phone? A means of connection. Common objects gain importance as they lend themselves to our everyday lives and ultimately contribute to each person's individual journey.

I make my work as a means to highlight these forgotten or overlooked items and moments, and to hopefully forge connection and humility between our common humanity.
